"Me, Myself, and Why": Jennifer Ouellette Self-Searching Posted on February 12, 2014 by Ros Johnson ... (O)ur sense of self is a construct, which is not the same thing as saying that it's illusionary, I think it's very real, but it is certainly not your genetic code or simply your synapses or simply any one thing, it's all those things integrated together that makes us who we are.

"Me, Myself, and Why": Jennifer Ouellette Self-Searching

Having come full circle in her examination of "me," Ouellette moves on to "myself," looking at behaviors and identity. She reports that studies with drunken fruit flies and mice provide clues about the link between genes and alcoholism and that research on virtual reality worlds indicates that the avatars one creates or that one bonds with can reveal much about self-perception.
